

GRAND JURY RETURNS 19 INDICTMENTS

TRIAL OF FALL IS DELAYED BY HIS COLLAPSE

Former Secretary of Interior
Unable to Leave His Bed
For Hearing.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 9 — The trial of Albert B. Fall, former secretary of interior, on charges of bribery came to at least a temporary halt today when the aged defendant, who collapsed in court yesterday failed to rally sufficiently to leave his bed.

Justice William Hitz, advised by counsel at the opening of court of Fall's condition, promptly appointed Dr. Stirling Ruffin, prominent local physician, to make an examination of the defendant in behalf of the court.

Frank J. Hogan, chief defense counsel, stepped to the bar with the announcement of his client's illness immediately upon the convening hour.

"Have you any suggestions?" asked Hitz.

"None," replied Hogan.

"Then I think I shall appoint a physician of standing and reputation to examine him," the justice said. "Has Dr. Stirling Ruffin any connection with this case?"

Upon being answered in the negative, Hitz said he would ask Ruffin to get in touch with Fall's doctor at once, "calling in a third if deemed advisable."

"Dr. H. T. Safford, Fall's doctor, reported that there is a recurrence of the coughing of blood this morning. Fall's temperature is still up also and his resiliency seemingly is gone. Only in the pulse was there any improvement at all."

"He is a very sick man," Safford said.

TWO LEADERS HAVE HOPE OF STOPPING WAR

Hoover and MacDonald Expect Naval Parley Will End
Racc For Power.

By GEORGE R. HOLMES
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Oct. 9 — President Hoover and Premier Ramsay MacDonald have high hopes that most of the obstacles which now seem to threaten the success of the five-power naval conference they have jointly sponsored for London in January can be ironed out by private negotiation well in advance of the meeting date—just as Anglo-American differences have yielded to this form of treatment.

A breathing space of more than three full months is allowed under the call of the conference, with an open invitation to the governments of Japan, France and Italy to discuss controversial points with Great Britain and the United States during that period. In this way, the powers could come to the conference table with a vast amount of preliminary work disposed of, even if the negotiations fell short of an accord such as already has been reached between the two principal sea powers.

"In the same way as the two governments (Great Britain and the United States) have kept your governments informally au courant of the recent discussions, so now his majesty's government will be willing, in the interval before the proposed conference to continue informal conversations . . . on any points which may require elucidation."

OPEN BID TO POWERS

Such is the text of the invitation. It constitutes an open bid to the smaller powers to take up their problems with London and Washington, and in consequence the next three months are likely to witness almost constant negotiation of a private nature.

The formal invitations outlined four points upon which Great Britain and the United States have reached substantial agreement, to-wit:

1. The desirability and feasibility of further curtailment under the Kellogg-Brand treaty outlawing war.

2. Naval parity between Great Britain and the United States to be fully attained in all classes of ships by 1936.

3. Extension of the building holiday in capital ships beyond the date set in the Washington treaty of 1922.

4. Abolition of the submarine as a weapon of war if other powers are agreeable.

Only one of these points offers any prospect of serious disagreement among the powers—that relating to the abolition of under sea craft.

SUCCESS DOUBTFUL

Japan, France and Italy—but particularly France—regard the submarine as "the poor man's defense" and can be expected to fight the proposal to the last ditch. Just as France did in Washington eight years ago. The Germans showed during the World war what submarines could do to superior surface sea-power and all of the smaller powers consider the undersea boat as their "equalizer."

Castaway, Who Asked 'Shot at Cubs' Gives Philadelphia Its First Victory

Howard Emke Proves At Chicago, May Be Down But Not Necessarily Out.

By JIMMY CORCORAN
(I. N. S. Special Correspondent)

CHICAGO, Oct. 9.—Not so long ago Howard Emke, who stood the Cubs on their top-pieces yesterday, wasn't good enough for the 15 other clubs in the American and National leagues.

The story goes that Mr. Cornelius McGillicuddy, known as Connie Mack, decided that there wasn't another good shake left in Emke's arm, and being a business man he tapped the interest of those 15 other teams in this guy who was a baseball at the hitter in a low-down manner.

The reply, as the story goes, came back from Judge Landis' office that Howard wasn't wanted. "Every team in both leagues has waived on you," Mack told the long, gangling chucker. "There is nothing for me to do but let you go."

And then Howard Emke the same who made several varieties of waving geraniums out of the esteemed Cubs at Mr. Wrigley's plant broke down and wept.

"GIVE ME A CHANCE," "Mr. McGillicuddy, please give me a chance to finish out the season and get into the world series. I want to pitch one game against the Cubs and I'll win. I don't want any pay. All I ask is a shot at those Cubs."

And so yesterday Emke had his "shot" at the Cubs.

Did he produce for Connie?

Answer: he did.

And you can bet your family album that he isn't going to go unrewarded.

Probably they did agree to waive Howard out of the National and American leagues—those 15 clubs—but the waving process can't begin to come up to the waving that the Cubs did in Mr. Emke's direction yesterday.

MACK EMBARRASSED

As stated, Howard agreed to work for nothing just to get a shot at the Cubs. But if you know your Connie you can bet a sack of potatoes against the summer's straw skinner that there will be a heavy piece of sugar attached to Emke's series check later in the month.

Of course you can easily imagine Connie Mack's embarrassment at the present time. He will have one deuce of a time trying to figure out whether he should start Walberg, Earnshaw or Grove today. Poor Connie! He deserves pity.

And the reason that he is placed in this unfortunate position for the second game of the world series this afternoon is because of Howard Emke—the bird in teams didn't want.

Castaway, Who Asked 'Shot at Cubs' Gives Philadelphia Its First Victory

Howard Enke Proves At Chicago, May Be Out But Not Necessarily Down.

By JIMMY CORCORAN
(L. N. S. Special Correspondent)

CHICAGO, Oct. 9.—Not so long ago Howard Enke, who stood the Cubs on their top-pieces yesterday, wasn't good enough for the 15 other clubs in the American and National leagues.

The story goes that Mr. Cornelius McGillicuddy, known as Connie Mack, decided that there wasn't another good shake left in Enke's arm, and being a business man he tapped the interest of those 15 other teams in this guy who was the baseball at the hitter in a low-down manner.

The reply, as the story goes, came back from Judge Landis' office that Howard wasn't wanted. "Every team in both leagues has waived on you," Mack told the long, gangling chucker. "There is nothing for me to do but let you go."

And then Howard Enke, the same who made several varieties of waving geraniums out of the esteemed Cubs at Mr. Wrigley's plant broke down and wept.

"GIVE ME A CHANCE"
"Mr. McGillicuddy," he said, "Give me a chance to finish out the season and get into the world series. I want to pitch one game against the Cubs and I'll win. I don't want any pay. All I ask is a shot at those Cubs."

And so yesterday Enke had his "shot" at the Cubs.

Did he produce for Connie?

Answer: he did. And you can bet your family album that he isn't going to go unrewarded.

Probably they did agree to waive Howard out of the National and American leagues—those 15 clubs—but the waiving process can't begin to come up to the waving that the Cubs did in Mr. Enke's direction yesterday.

MACK EMBARRASSED
As stated, Howard agreed to work for nothing just to get a shot at the Cubs. But if you know your Connie you can bet a sack of potatoes against the summer's straw skimmer that there will be a heavy piece of sugar attached to Enke's series check later in the month.

Of course you can easily imagine Connie Mack's embarrassment at the present time. He will have one deuce of a time trying to figure out whether he should start Walberg, Earnshaw or Grove today. Poor Connie! He deserves pity.

And the reason that he is placed in this unfortunate position for the second game of the world series this afternoon is because of Howard Enke—the bird 15 teams didn't want.

Italy Makes Good Use of Vast Water Power
One after another the great waterfalls of the Alps and Apennines have been placed in subjugation by Italy, their water guided into huge, high pressure conduits and forced to turn giant turbines, writes Henry Kittredge Norton in World's Work.
Before the war these turbines were already producing two billion kilowatt hours per year; during the war, because of the shortage of coal and the need for power, this capacity was increased by another billion kilowatts. After the post-war turbulence had settled down into the Fascist regime, a new impetus was given to electrical development, and by the end of 1928 the actual consumption had reached 7,500,000,000 kilowatt hours per annum.
Since then it has continued to mount. More than 7,000 of Italy's 2,000 communes are now supplied with electrical energy. The per capita consumption runs close to 200 kilowatt hours.
As was to be expected under the circumstances, by far the greater portion of Italy's electrical energy is used in turning the wheels of her factories. Lighting is a secondary consideration. Sixty per cent of Italy's electrical energy is used for motor power; 15 per cent for light and heat; 14 per cent in the metallurgical and chemical industries, and the remaining 11 per cent for the electrified railways.
The Rose in History
Roses and romance have been kin through the centuries. They have been flung to knights in armor, have been worn beneath the coat of mail as heroes entered battle, have been strewn at the feet of returning conquerors, have lain in quiet peace on the biers of the dead, have softened the contour of tombs and burial mounds, have marked the confident pathways of brides have been thrown at the feet of idols. Wherever man has sought to express what words cannot say, the rose has played its part.

Kid Wagner, of Chillicothe, To Clash With East Side Mauler at Grand.

Although Valentine has been inactive for some time, he is a real ringster and tonight will make his comeback. His fescow with Wagner will tell just how far the local boy will go for he will meet a real test in Wagner.
Wagner has not lost a bout in the past year. In some 36 fights he has stopped 26, won five decisions and fought three draws. In the past week he has trimmed the Lusador family. Last Thursday he won from Louis Lusador former bantam champ of Columbus and Monday night he stopped Jimmy Lusador, brother of Louie, in four rounds. He has also beaten K. O. Hill, Jock Hoster, Tarzen Phillips, Eddie Durbin and a host of others. Fred Bowser, who handles Valentine is not discouraged and expects his boy to win via the kayo route regardless of Wagner's record. Both weigh 135 pounds.

Jock Greenlee, a stable mate of Kid Chocolate will oppose Biff Swartz, Lancaster sensation.
In another feature bout, Merle Davis and Kid Beck east side and north side respectively will meet in a grudge fight. All week they have been throwing verbal bombs at each other. Wednesday night they will argue it out in the ring.
This boxing program will accompany an excellent picture, "Matinee Idol" and a news reel. Doors open at 6:30. Bill Pickens will referee.

Wizard of Electricity on Starvation's Verge
A story is told about Charles P. Steinmetz that, true or not, illustrates his peculiar temperament. Writes Jonathan Norton Leonard in World's Work. A friend who had known him at Yonkers came to see him soon after he had gone to Lynn, Mass., with the General Electric. He found him in a sad state. His clothes showed frantic signals of distress, his face looked pinched and thin. It wasn't easy to get at the root of the trouble, but in last the friend induced Steinmetz to talk.
By some clerical mistake Steinmetz's name had not been entered on the pay roll and he had received no money at all in the four weeks he had been at Lynn. His own meager savings had nearly run out and he was too proud to complain. There were men at Lynn who were working for nothing, glad of the experience which the job gave them, and Steinmetz concluded he was in this classification.

TWAS EVER THUS

Although the criticism of the morals of the current New York plays could not be termed "Honi Soit Qui Mal Y Pense" as there certainly seems to be an unbalanced emphasis on sex and an undue amount of smut in some of them, still in defense of the present generation, it is only fair to add that a glance backward through the history of the drama proves the utter fallacy of the opinion held by many people that the plays of today are the most indecent and degenerate of any period since Sophocles. There has always been a certain amount of indecency in the theater from the early days when Greek drama flourished in Athens down to Twentieth Century Broadway with its "Strange Interlude," "It's A Wise Child," and "The Bachelor Father."

"The Medea" of Euripides, produced in Athens in 432 B. C., contains some passages which would give the Comstock Society for the Suppression of Vice reason to call a special meeting. Sophocles' "Oedipus" of this same period, has for its theme a story of incest that would make the much criticized modern play dealing with perverted sex instincts seem a bed-time story in comparison.

The old Attic comedy, which flourished from 446 to 392 B. C., contains jokes of so ribald and coarse a nature that even a modern burlesque producer would hesitate to use them. The critics of Aristophanes, the chief representative of this school of playwrights complained that the exquisite loveliness of the lyrical part of his work was cheapened by the low and boorish wit that had to be included to please the vulgar mob. It would seem that a portion of the audiences of ancient Athens, the very sanctum of culture were possessed of the same unrefined tastes that characterize a certain element of our audiences today.

In the Latin drama, we find evidence of a similar taste for smut among the Romans of 200 B. C. "The Menaechmi" of Plautus with its courtisans, roustabouts, and vulgar wit may have amused the Roman lovers of the drama, but it could not be called exactly an elevating influence for the community. It is interesting to note that the aristocratic Horace disapproved of the work of Plautus because he said that it depicted a corrupt society whose prevailing motives were lust and greed. This calls to mind a recent newspaper article in which a New York theater-goer stated that he had attended several current plays and had not found single character in the lot orthy of being called a "tad" or a "gentleman."

We find also that the drama of our Anglo Saxon forbears is not what the Comstockians would consider "sane reproche." "Ralph Roister Doister," the first English comedy although it was written by a school master, one Nicholas Udall, to be acted by schoolboys, is an adaptation of a play of Plautus and contains some pretty strong meat for the "plastic age." Grammar Gurton's "Needle," written by William Stevenson, was another of the earliest English comedies which is characterized by similar coarse humor.

Among the pre-Shakespearean dramatists we find this same tendency. Christopher Marlowe's "Doctor Faustus" near evidence of the fact that the "Bard of Avon" was not solely responsible for introducing questionable passages into Elizabethan drama. And those who know Shakespeare in the unpurged state feel that even Julia Marlowe and E. H. Sothern might have spent the night behind jail bars just as Helmer Mencken did. "Hamlet," "Much Ado About Nothing," "Richard the Third," and "Antony and Cleopatra," and even that lovely lyrical tale of young love, "Romeo and Juliet," all contain lines that would give the National Board of Censorship serious food for thought.

At the end of the Elizabethan period, Phillip Massinger's "A New Way to Pay Old Debts," and similar plays by John Ford and James Shirley were characterized by such blune vulgarity that the theaters were closed in 1642 by act of parliament through the influence of the Puritans. The playhouses were not opened again until 1660 at the beginning of the Restoration when Charles II came back from his exile in France.

The Restoration drama, following in its way the years of Puritan repression, bears evidence of the reaction of the people against restraint. Such comedies as "Con-greve's "Way Of the World," and "Love For Love" show external polish an internal rottenness. The brilliant wit of Vanbrough and Wycherly is also colored by this immorality. In 1698, the Restoration comedies became so unbearable that the Reverend Jeremy Collier published his famous pamphlet on the "Profaneness and Immorality of the English Stage."

It would seem, then, that salacious jokes and sex appeal in plays are not confined to Broadway productions or to the present generation but are as old as the stage itself and we may at least derive some comfort from the realization that the twentieth century is neither the first nor the worst offender in sully the fair name of the drama.

East Indian Idol Held in Supreme Veneration

The name Jugernaut itself is an Anglo-Burmese corruption of the Hindu name, the name of Vishnu or Krishna in one of his manifestations. It means literally "lord of the world."

It is the image of an idol in the temple of Rangoon, India. The temple itself is a massive structure, built of brick and stone, and is the most sacred of all the temples in the city. It is the center of a great religious festival, the "Jugernaut" festival, which is held every year. The festival is a time of great rejoicing and is one of the most important of the city's religious life.

AMERICAN'S HOSPITALITY

Blue Blood And Red

by ROBERT TERRY SHANNON

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

Eddie Regan, once a member of a New York gang, has escaped and gone to Virginia, where he befriends Penfield Paradine, who dies and leaves all his possessions to Eddie. Eddie had been in love with Bernice Veressi, "gang girl," but all thought of her is put out of his heart when he meets and falls in love with Marian Thorn-dike. Eddie declares his love for Marian, but she discourages him and tells him she expects to marry Tom Freeman. Freeman dislikes Eddie, and one afternoon when Eddie is calling on Marian, Freeman comes in and insults Eddie. Marian tells Eddie it is hopeless for him to love her, and Eddie, discouraged, decides to go to Richmond. While he is there he meets Mike Arno, a former member of the gang. Arno tells him that Bernice is still in love with him (Eddie) and Eddie's thoughts once more swing to her. Mike tells Eddie he is a "sap" for staying in the country and loving a country girl, but when Eddie returns to his own home, and Marian telephones him, Eddie realizes how deeply he has become attached to his environment.

Now Go On with the Story

CHAPTER XXIX.
IN another moment he feared to see you. I'll be waiting for you where the road bends past Locust Grove Church. It won't take long." Eddie, unseen, shrugged his shoulders. Freeman was looking for trouble. It was too bad it couldn't be postponed, but he had no way to stop the guy from meeting him in the road. "If you insist, tonight's all right with me, Freeman." He hung up the receiver.

The situation was beyond his control. Tom Freeman was going to meet him and there could be only one result—trouble. And the worst of it was that his date with Marian would probably be spoiled. There wasn't a great deal of charm in calling upon the adored subject with a black eye or a swollen nose but, at worst, nothing more serious than a scrap was in sight.

Freeman, whatever his faults, was not a dopey New York gangster who would knock a rival off with a bullet from ambush. No, Freeman was not that kind of a man. When Eddie came to Locust Grove Church he saw Freeman's car, with the lights extinguished, drawn up in the yard. Mechanically he turned his horse and lunge in the drive, mounted and tied his horse to a tree.

Freeman stirred with bulky menace in his car, climbed out and slammed the door behind him. The moon, hanging low in the sky, gave a pale, ghostly light among the trees. Anyone passing the road could not see without special effort, the vehicle and the two men in the yard that surrounded the church. Eddie walked straight up to Freeman and faced him.

"What's it all about, big boy?" he demanded.

Freeman had left his hat in the car, and he could see a faint gleam in the hair of the other and his swollen, high-colored face.

"It won't take me long to tell you," Tom Freeman said. "I'm an investigator, and I'm here to find out what you're up to."

"I'm a detective," Freeman said. "I'm here to find out what you're up to."

"I'm a detective," Freeman said. "I'm here to find out what you're up to."

"I'm a detective," Freeman said. "I'm here to find out what you're up to."

see that you don't put foot on the place."

"You're so thoughtful of her father?" Eddie mocked him.

"That's only part of it, Buddy. I've got a score of my own to settle with you—on account of the little argument we didn't have time to finish the other night. It was a lucky thing for you she came out and stopped it."

Eddie sensed the uselessness of words between them. Freeman wanted action and there was no way without sacrificing pride, to avoid it.

"All right, Freeman," he said. "No more chewing the rag about it. I'll fight you in a minute."

"Don't hurry," he took off his coat and hat, stripped himself to his sleeveless undershirt. Freeman was a trifle surprised at the thoroughness of Eddie's preparation, but he initiated him after a moment's hesitation. Eddie held up his hand warningly.

"You've been waiting this ever since we met, Freeman. There won't be any handshaking—this is your grudge fight and it's going to a finish. Understand? One of us is going to get licked good."

"Fight with you to the finish."

Freeman grinned. One moment they were standing facing each other with fists fiddling movements of their arms—and then, by sudden mutual impulse, they rushed together, like two wild men, with driving fists, with released hatred and the desire to hurt, to pound, to beat to the earth.

In a twinkling they had thrown away all of the slowly acquired civilization of ten thousand years.

Eddie Regan and Tom Freeman were as savage as the primitive man who, perhaps, had originated in skins, on the same strip of ground ages ago. They collided, recoiled and rushed back to each other with renewed fury. No words sprang from their clenched fists, only explosive breathing, gasps and hissing between the teeth. Eddie was conscious of a supreme vigorous condition he had attained through his prolonged outdoor life with the axe; he could feel his muscled fists smashing home with driving impacts. Freeman's blows caught him and landed him, but his fresh vitality threw off the shock.

They were now beyond the point of coherent thought; they were unconscious as ferocious as young tigers in heated collision. At first it was all a prelude, a lead-in, a series of feints, a gradual building up of the energy of youth and physical condition was expended, and they fought, now slowly and more cautiously. The superior weight of Freeman came down upon Eddie's strength when they locked arms in clinches; it required his full strength to push the other away and drive desperately for the jaw.

BEACONLIGHT OF FACT

The fact that one of the greatest tragedies of American history was brought about by the presumption of authority is emphasized in Dolores Del Rio's United Artists starring vehicle, "Evangeline," which comes to the Cliftona theatre Wednesday. The Acadians, French by birth, but English by allegiance following their settlement of Acadia, in Nova Scotia, were forcefully deported from Grand Pre at the command of the governor-general, who acted first and asked permission afterward. With England and France at war in Europe, the governor-general, fearing that the Acadians might take up arms for France demanded them to stand ready for a summons to fight for England. The Acadians, being a peace loving people, refused to do so. As a result, while his report on the situation was en route to England on a ship, the governor-general deported the Acadians, confiscated their crops and herds and burned their homes. "Evangeline," as a film play, gives an accurate account of the situation.

EXCELLENT FILM

What a glorious entertainment was presented to audiences at the Met theater this week. Words fail to describe its perfection: It has everything, a romantic story, color, sound, dialog, fun, drama. It absorbs the mind and heart in a great pulsing story! It is one of the greatest things the screen has ever offered.

"The Dance of Life" is the picture which opened its four day run at the Met theater Sunday night. It is the world-famous stage success, "Burlesque," on the screen.

Hal Swelly relieves the role of "Skid," which he created for the stage play, and, in "The Dance of Life," he is doubly effective with Nancy Carroll, the charming heroine.

TWAS EVER THUS

Although the criticism of the morals of the current New York plays could not be termed "Honi Soit Qui Mal Y Pense" as there certainly seems to be an unbalanced emphasis on sex and an undue amount of smut in some of them, still in defense of the present generation, it is only fair to add that a glance backward through the history of the drama proves the utter fallacy of the opinion held by many people that the plays of today are the most indecent and degenerate of any period since Sophocles. There has always been a certain amount of indecency in the theater from the early days when Greek drama flourished in Athens down to Twentieth Century Broadway with its "Strange Interlude," "It's a Wise Child," and "The Bachelor Father."

"The Medea" of Euripides, produced in Athens in 432 B. C., contains some passages which would give the Comstock Society for the Suppression of Vice reason to call a special meeting. Sophocles' "Oedipus" of this same period, has for its theme a story of incest that would make the much criticized modern play dealing with perverted sex instincts seem a bed-time story in comparison.

The old Attic comedy, which flourished from 446 to 392 B. C., contains jokes of so ribald and coarse a nature that even a modern burlesque producer would hesitate to use them. The critics of Aristophanes, the chief representative of this school of playwrights complained that the exquisite loveliness of the lyrical part of his work was cheapened by the low and boorish wit that had to be included to please the vulgar mob. It would seem that a portion of the audiences of ancient Athens, the very sanctum of culture were possessed of the same unrefined tastes that characterize a certain element of our audiences today.

In the Latin drama, we find evidence of a similar taste for smut among the Romans of 200 B. C. "The Menacechmi" of Plautus with its courtesans, roustabouts, and vulgar wit may have amused the Roman lovers of the drama, but it could not be called exactly an elevating influence for the community. It is interesting to note that the aristocratic Horace disapproved of the wor of Plautus because he said that it depicted a corrupt society whose prevailing motives were lust and greed. This calls to mind a recent newspaper article in which a New York theatre-goer stated that he had attended several current plays and had not found single character in the lot orthy of being called a "lady" or a "gentleman."

"k s'aeav vd. or a cm v cmf sh. We find also that the drama of our Anglo Saxon forbears is not what the Comstockians would consider "sans reproche." "Ralph Roister Doister," the first English comedy although it was written by a school master, one Nicholas Udall, to be acted by schoolboys, is an adaption of a play of Plautus and contains some pretty strong meat for the "plastic age." Grammer Gurton's "Needle," written by William Stevenson, was another of the earliest English comedies which is characterized by similar coarse humor.

Among the pre-Shakespearean dramatists we find this same tendency. Christopher Marlowe's "Doctor Faustus" near evidence of the fact that the "Bard of Avon" was not solely responsible for introducing questionable passages into Elizabethan drama. And those who know Shakespeare in the unexpurgated state feel that even Julia Marlowe and E. H. Sothern might have spent the night behind jail bars just as Helen Mencken did. "Hamlet," "Much Ado About Nothing," "Richard the Third," and "Antony and Cleopatra," and even that lovely lyrical tale of young love, "Romeo and Juliet," all contain lines that would give the National Board of Censorship serious food for thought.

At the end of the Elizabethan period, Philip Massinger's "A New Way To Pay Old Debts," and similar plays by John Ford and James Shirley were characterized by such blune vulgarity that the theaters were closed in 1642 by act of parliament through the influence of the Puritans. The playhouses were not opened again until 1660 at the beginning of the Restoration when Charles II came back from his exile in France.

The Restoration drama, following it is did the years of Puritan repression, bears evidence of the reaction of the people against restraint. Such comedies as Con-greve's "Way Of the World," and "Love For Love" show external polish an internal rottenness. The brilliant wit of Vanbrough and Wycherly is also colored by this immorality. In 1698, the Restoration comedies became so unbearable that the Reverend Jeremy Collier published his famous pamphlet on the "Profaneness and Immorality of the English Stage."

It would seem, then, that salacious jokes and sex appeal in plays are not confined to Broadway productions or to the present generation but are as old as the stage itself and we may at least derive some comfort from the realization that the twentieth century is neither the first nor the worst offender in sullying the fair name of the drama.

East Indian Idol Held

in Supreme Veneration

The name Juggernaut itself is an Anglicized corruption of the Hindu Jagannath, the name of Vishnu or Krishna in one of his manifestations. It means literally "lord of the world."

It is the name of an idol in the temple at Puri, India. The temple itself is a magnificent one, built in 1198, at a cost of $2,500,000, while the idol consists of an irregular block of stone, pyramidal in shape, having two large diamonds for eyes.

On its festal days the idol is conveyed to another shrine on a magnificent car, 45 feet high and 35 feet square, having 16 wheels, each 7 feet in diameter. The number of pilgrims who visit the temple was formerly estimated at 1,200,000 a year. At the present day 100,000 or more may assemble there on the great festivals.

AMERICAN'S HOSPITALITY

Blue Blood And Red

by ROBERT TERRY SHANNON

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

Eddie Regan, once a member of a New York gang, has escaped and gone to Virginia, where he befriends Penfield Paradine, who dies and leaves all his possessions to Eddie. Eddie had been in love with Bernice Veressi, "gang girl," but all thought of her is put out of his heart when he meets and falls in love with Marian Thorndike. Eddie declares his love for Marian, but she discourages him and tells him she expects to marry Tom Freeman. Freeman dislikes Eddie, and one afternoon when Eddie is calling on Marian, Freeman comes in and insults Eddie. Marian tells Eddie it is hopeless for him to love her, and Eddie, discouraged, decides to go to Richmond. While he is there he meets Mike Arno, a former member of the gang. Arno tells him that Bernice is still in love with him (Eddie) and Eddie's thoughts once more swing to her. Mike tells Eddie he is a "sap" for staying in the country and loving a country girl, but when Eddie returns to his own home, and Marian telephones him, Eddie realizes how deeply he has become attached to his environment.

Now Go On with the Story

CHAPTER XXIX.
IN another moment he feared she would say goodbye, and he was desperately reluctant to end it. The mere sound of her voice over the wire seemed to make his blood run faster and bring to him a pleasure unlike any other possible feeling. He could hang on to her words endlessly, greedily.

"What have you been doing?" he asked.
"Nothing."
"What are you doing now?"
"Oh, there are a dozen things I ought to be doing, but I am just lazying around. Mother and father aren't home yet, and I reckon I'm a little lonesome."

Eddie looked swiftly at the clock in the hall; it was not yet eight o'clock—plenty of time to see her tonight, if he dared ask and if she would let him come.

"I'm lonesome myself," he said. "Why don't you let me come over for a while?"

Briefly she hesitated. Then, "Well, why not? Only we won't get into any argument tonight, will we?"

"I'll say we won't," he responded, thrillingly.
A wild time of anticipation vibrated through him with stimulating current; when he was shaving and brushing himself to call upon Marian Thorndike there was no state of happiness on earth comparable with it. A boyish pride in his new suit, the fresh shirt and necktie, delighted him. In the past, he had been conscious of a certain shabbiness before her and now he felt for the first time that he might appear well groomed and smart in her eyes.

Maybe those things counted with a girl, maybe they didn't—but all the same he glowed with a minor exhilaration.

Tobe, already, was at the barn getting the horse and buggy for him. Unexpectedly the telephone rang again and he had a sudden fear that Marian might be calling up again to break the date.

"That you, Regan?"
The masculine voice was faintly familiar, but he could not, at once, identify it.

"This is Regan."
"This is Tom Freeman speaking. Can I see you?"

"You can see me any time you like, Freeman."
"I want to see you right away."

"You can see me any time you like except right away. I am busy this evening. How about the first thing in the morning?"

"I know you are busy tonight," Freeman returned, in a pent-up voice, "and that's why I am going to see you. I'll be waiting for you where the road bends past Locust Grove Church. It won't take long."

Eddie, unseen, shrugged his shoulders. Freeman was looking for trouble. It was too bad it couldn't be postponed, but he had no way to stop the guy from meeting him in the road.

"If you insist, tonight's all right with me, Freeman." He hung up the receiver.

The situation was beyond his control. Tom Freeman was going to meet him and there could be only one result—trouble. And the worst of it was that his date with Marian would probably be spoiled. There wasn't a great deal of charm in calling upon the adored object with a black eye or a swollen nose, but, at worst, nothing more serious than a scrap was in sight.

Freeman, whatever his faults, was not a dopey New York gangster who would knock a rival off with a bullet from ambush. No, Freeman was not that kind of a man. When Eddie came to Locust Grove Church he saw Freeman's car, with the lights extinguished, drawn up in the yard. Mechanically he turned his horse and buggy in the drive, alighted and tied his horse to a tree.

Freeman stirred with bulky menace in his car, climbed out and slammed the door behind him. The moon, hanging low in the sky, gave a pale, ghostly light among the trees. Anyone passing the road could not see, without special effort, the vehicles and the two men in the grove that surrounded the church. Eddie walked straight up to Freeman and faced him.

"What's it all about, Big Boy?" he demanded.

Freeman had left his hat in the car—and he could see a faint curl in the hair of the other above his sullen, high-colored face.

"It won't take me long to tell you," Tom Freeman replied. "I'm not an eavesdropper, and you understand yourself what these party telephone lines are. I picked up my phone this evening and heard you talking to a certain party."

"And of course you stood there with your ear glued," Eddie said, deliberately insulting.

"I listened because it was a matter of personal interest to me," Freeman retorted. "I heard you make a date to call on this party, and I'm here now to tell you that you can't do it."

"Who says I can't?"
"I say you can't. You've been warned that you're not wanted there, and as long as my father is out of the county I'm going to see that you don't put foot on the place."

"You're so thoughtful of her father!" Eddie mocked him.

"That's only part of it, Buddy. I've got a score of my own to settle with you—on account of the little argument we didn't have time to finish the other night. It was a lucky thing for you she came out and stopped it."

Eddie sensed the uselessness of words between them. Freeman wanted action and there was no way without sacrificing pride, to avoid it.

"All right, Freeman," he said. "No more chewing the rag about it. I'm with you in a minute."

Deliberately he took off his coat and hat, stripped himself to his sleeveless undershirt. Freeman was a trifle surprised at the thoroughness of Eddie's preparation, but he imitated him after a moment's hesitation. Eddie held up his hand warningly.

"You've been waiting this ever since we met, Freeman. There won't be any handshaking—this is your grudge fight and it's going to a finish. Understand? One of us is going to get licked good."

"I'm with you to the finish," Freeman growled. One moment they were standing facing each other with futile fiddling movements of their arms—and then, by sudden mutual impulse, they rushed together, like two wild men, with driving fists, with released hatred and the desire to hurt, to pound, to beat to the earth.

In a twinkling they had thrown away all of the slowly acquired civilization of ten thousand years. Eddie Regan and Tom Freeman were as savage as the primitive men who, perhaps, had fought clad in skins, on this same strip of ground ages ago. They collided, recoiled and rushed back to each other with renewed fury. No words sprang from the clenched lips, only expulsive breathing, gasps and hissing between the teeth. Eddie was conscious of a supreme vigorous condition he had attained through his prolonged outdoor labor with the axe; he could feel his naked fists smash home with driving impacts. Freeman's blows caught him and jarred him, but his fresh vitality threw off the shock.

They were now beyond the point of coherent thought; they were unreasoning, as ferocious as young cyclones in heated collision. At first it was all a prodigal rushing forth of furiousness, but gradually the early glorious energy of youth and physical condition was expanded, and they fought, now, slowly and more cautiously.

The superior weight of Freeman bore down upon Eddie's strength when they locked arms in clinches; it required his full strength to push the other away and drive desperately for the jaw while an opening lasted. Freeman's fists were like huge knobs on the ends of plunging pistons. Eddie jerked his head out of a blow's path and countered with a smash that caught Freeman solidly on the jaw. Whether the blow hurt or not, Eddie had no means of knowing—he felt his own ribs pounded, the right side and then the left. Stepping in closer he shot an upper-cut that snapped the other's head back, but his man still came in.

BEACONLIGHT OF FACT

The fact that one of the greatest tragedies of American history was brought about by the presumption of authority is emphasized in Dolores Del Rio's United Artists starring vehicle, "Evangeline," which comes to the Cliftona theatre Wednesday. The Acadians, French by birth, but English by allegiance following their settlement of Acadia, in Nova Scotia, were forcefully deported from Grand Pre at the command of the governor-general, who acted first and asked permission afterward. With England and France at war in Europe, the governor-general, fearing that the Acadians might take up arms for France demanded them to stand ready for a summons to fight for England. The Acadians, being a peace loving people, refused to do so. As a result, while his report on the situation was en route to England on a ship, the governor-general deported the Acadians, confiscated their crops and herds and burned their homes. "Evangeline," as a film play, gives an accurate account of the situation.

EXCELLENT FILM

What a glorious entertainment was presented to audiences at the Met theater this week. Words fail to describe its perfection: It has everything, a romantic story, color, sound, dialog, fun, drama. It absorbs the mind and heart in a great pulsing story! It is one of the greatest things the screen has ever offered.

"The Dance of Life" is the picture which opened its four day run at the Met theater Sunday night. It is the world-famous stage success, "Burlesque," on the screen.

Hal Svvelly relieves the role of "Skid," which he created for the stage play, and, in "The Dance of Life," he is doubly effective with Nancy Carroll, the charming heroine.

"They work while you sleep"

Do you have days when you feel sluggish—when everything seems an effort—and you have no appetite? Take a candy Cascaret before you go to bed! This gentle, harmless aid to the bowels is often all that is needed to clear up a sick headache and cause any other symptom of sluggishness to vanish.

Cascarets can't harm you for cascara is a favored laxative with medical authorities. It does a perfect job of cleansing without violence and without forming the laxative habit. Cascarets are pleasant to take, for they are sweetened with pure cane sugar and flavored with real licorice—children love them.

A candy Cascaret or two will usually clear up a bilious, constipated condition between night and morning. Their action is so gentle there is no discomfort from them or danger in their frequent use. They are a pure vegetable product. They do not weaken the system. In fact, the cascara actually strengthens bowel muscles. Remember this when you're coated tongue, bad breath, the head feels dull or there's sign of poor elimination.

If you should lift the body of every car

then you too would choose

The New BUICK

If you were to lift the body from the chassis of any one of a hundred cars—and compare the vitally important details of chassis design and construction—you would find Buick so outstandingly superior in all phases of fine car engineering that you would almost inevitably make Buick your choice. Here is what you would see in this famous chassis:

Buick's great new Valve-in-Head engine—developing 99 horsepower in the 124- and 132-inch models, and 80½ horsepower in the 118-inch models. Unapproached in smoothness, all-around performance—ability, reliability and economy as well.

Buick's new Controlled Servo Enclosed Mechanical Brakes—providing smooth, positive, silent braking, with minimum pedal pressure. And—because fully protected against dust, dirt and water—operating at maximum efficiency in any weather.

Buick's new frictionless steering gear and new Road Shock Eliminator—two advancements introduced by Buick. The Buick wheel offering effortless control throughout its entire turning range—and the new Road Shock Eliminator assuring complete freedom from annoying jolts and jars.

Buick's new, longer rear springs, and new Lovejoy Duodraulic Shock Absorbers—front and rear. Combining to check both bound and rebound, and providing a degree of riding ease without parallel anywhere.

And, finally, such established Buick superiorities as the famous double-drop frame of toughest steel . . . the massive side and cross members reinforced at points of stress to insure greatest long life . . . the celebrated torque tube drive, Buick multiple-disc clutch, self-lubricating differential, and numerous other features.

When the list of Buick's chassis features—entirely aside from the irresistible appeal of Buick's new Fisher Bodies—reads like a roll-call of all that is soundest and best in fine car engineering . . . and when, in addition, you can buy a Buick for as little as $1225, f. o. b. factory . . . what wonder that all comparisons lead to Buick! What wonder that more than 2,000,000 people have invested their money in Buicks—and that from two to five times as many are purchasing this new Buick as any other automobile priced above $1200!

Travel by Rail

It seems that the average German now makes 23 railroad trips a year. This makes them about the world's best travelers so far as the rails are concerned. Americans go farther and oftener, but the motor car does the big business in human movement in this country.

KINGSTON

On Wednesday evening, Miss Mildred Holderman entertained her bridge club and a few guests at a six o'clock dinner. Those enjoying this pleasant affair were Mrs. G. W. McGinnis, Mrs. Paul McGinnis, Mrs. R. W. Brundige, Mrs. J. P. Gardner, Mrs. H. S. Boggs, Mrs. Amos Leist, Mrs. James P. Wright, Mrs. W. R. Sunderland, Mrs. Egbert Freshour, Mrs. Edgar Hassenpflug, Mrs. Robert Cryder, Mrs. F. C. Leasure, Mrs. Dennis H. Dreisbach, Mrs. Carson Dreisbach, Mrs. H. H. Snyder and Miss Josephine Brundige.

The house was beautifully decorated with baskets of fall flowers and ferns. Mrs. Paul McGinnis was awarded first prize and Mrs. G. W. McGinnis, second prize for high scores.

The menu for the annual chicken dinner to be given by the ladies of the Presbyterian church at the church on Thursday evening, Oct. 9th, will be as follows: roast chicken, mashed potatoes, gravy, dressing, pea patties, hot rolls, perfection salad, home-made ice cream, cake and coffee. The price is 65 cents and serving will begin at 6 o'clock.

Guest Speakers At First D.A.R. Meeting Held Tuesday Night

The activities for the season of the Daughters of the American Revolution, were inaugurated Tuesday night, at the first meeting held at the home of Mrs. Felix Caldwell on S. Court-st. Mrs. Ned Bell, Mrs. Lee Shaner, Mrs. Maude Foster, Mrs. Ella Crites and Mrs. Bertha Tegardine were the hostesses assisting in the entertainment.

The Regent, Mrs. Orion King, presided at the business meeting, which was opened with the Lord's prayer, and the Salute to the Flag. The business was brief, and when it was closed, the guest speaker of the evening, Miss Amanda Thomas, state chairman of Radio Division, and chairman of National Defense, of the Anne Simpson chapter, Columbus, was introduced.

Before giving her address, Miss Thomas presented the Pickaway Plains chapter a gavel made from wood of the Logan Elm. This gavel was a gift of the Anne Simpson chapter in Columbus.

Miss Thomas chose for her subject "National Defense." The address was intensely interesting and instructive. She discussed the different phases of this subject, particularly stressing the immigrant question and the question of deportation. She emphatically stated that the Daughters of the American Revolution stood for preparedness against war, and not preparedness for war.

In conclusion, Miss Thomas read a paper prepared by Mrs. Walker, national chairman of National Defense which will be broadcast on a national defense program in the near future.

The next number on the program was a reading by Miss Mary Alice Stein, a member of the Columbus Chapter of the D. A. R., Columbus, O. Modern Mothers Help Create New Slogan

Millions More Each Year Turn To Famous External Method of Treating Colds

Each year more and more mothers turn to Vicks VapoRub, the modern external treatment for colds, because it is just rubbed on and cannot upset children's stomachs, as "dosing" is so apt to do.

Originally designed and first used largely for children's colds, this better external method gradually spread as one enthusiastic mother told another. Years of actual use also proved it equally effective for the colds of grown-ups. Today the whole trend of medical practice is away from needless "dosing" and Vicks—a household word in America—is used in more than 60 countries abroad.

The ever-growing demand for Vicks is shown in its familiar slogan, expressing the number of jars used yearly. First announced when Vicks reached "17 Million Jars Yearly"—later raised to "21 Million"—the figures are again being changed, as there are now "Over 26 Million Jars Used Yearly."

LOCAL ARTISTS ON O. E. S. PROGRAMME

A splendid program Tuesday night, at the social session, followed the regular business meeting of the Circleville Order of Eastern Star. Mrs. L. E. Lutz had charge of the programme which was delightfully informal, and was presented entirely by home talent.

The dancers were Marvene Wallace and Betty Cooper. The musicians were Helen Yates and Elizabeth Roundhouse. The artists each with a charming personality, provided a programme that was thoroughly enjoyed, because the participants are able performers, of numbers popular with any audience. Their presence Tuesday night lent an atmosphere of professional entertainment to the evening at the lodge.

The program follows:
Tap Waltz—The Pagan Love Song Marvene Wallace
Acrobatic number—The Frog..... Betty Cooper
Violin Solo—"That Tumble Down Shook in Athlone" Helen Yates
Accompanist—Elizabeth Roundhouse
Encore—Lonesome Firefly Toe Dance

Following the program, delicious refreshments were served by the committee, which was composed of Mrs. Robert Gearhart, chairman, and Mrs. Charles Hall, Mrs. E. I. Gephart, Mrs. Earl Price, Mrs. Earl Lutz and Mrs. Will Graham.

Avoid Excuses

Excuses are our favorite alibis when telling the truth might hurt. No successful man has them in his equipment. For it is usually the case that the best man at making excuses is the poorest man at making a living.—Grit.

Clocks in Odd Shapes

Clocks in the forms of heads have appeared in Europe. One is a human skull, another a monkey's head and another a grotesque dog's cranium. One eye of each head represents the hours and the other the minutes. The numerals are painted around the optics like large eyelashes, while the orbs revolve and serve as hands.
